

FILLING THE CHURCH.

Some Sensational Methods Used by English Clergymen.

The introduction of what drives and dances at church "socials"—against which protests have been raised in various quarters—has been a means of attracting young people towards the church adds another couple to the unaccountable religious advertising methods which have been making steady church-goers gasp with astonishment. A few years ago the Rev. Wilson Carlie, for instance, decided that he would take a couple of the day as the text for his sermon. Prior to the evening service he also walked through the city streets at the head of his choir playing a trombone.

The public were attracted by his originality to such an extent that in a very short time his church at St. Mary's Hill was crowded every Sunday. Mr. Carlie has abandoned his public performances on the trombone, but his topical sermons are still an interesting attraction at St. Mary's Hill.

Originality, too, was the keynote of the success of the Rev. E. Ker Grey, incumbent of St. George's Chapel, Albenham street, W., the originator of the evening drives and dances. These were held about nine o'clock on Sunday evenings, after the fashionable members of the congregation had dined, and the worshippers appeared in garb to be seen in no other English church.

This, however, was by no means the only method by which the Rev. E. Ker Grey sought to attract congregations to his Sunday services. He instituted a Waterloo service, and on the Sunday before the anniversary of Waterloo the congregation was surprised to see arranged around the pulpit a number of cannon-balls, couple of cuirasses, a shot-riddled fire trunk, and a case of skulls and cross-bones, relics of the famous battle.

Almost American in its sensationalism was the method of a provincial clergyman who recently climbed his church steeple and took photographs, with a view to bringing his church into notoriety. It reminds one very much of some of the methods adopted by the Salvation Army. "A telegram will be read from Hell about 4 o'clock Sunday," was the notice displayed by the Salvation Army at Darwen some time ago, while at another Lancashire shelter one of the Salvation Army officers preached a sermon on the subject of Death, standing in a coffin and wrapped in shrouds.

Present-day clergymen are recognizing the fact that a healthy body leads to a sound mind, and on that account are instituting all sorts of athletic clubs for young men as side attractions for their churches. At Salisbury, for instance, one of the Rev. Father Freedy and the Rev. Father Boudier acting as timekeepers, bottle-holders, and towel-waggers at wrestling and boxing displays organized in connection with their young men's clubs. Then, again, the Rev. Mr. Digby of Coventry, has, amongst other things, persuaded Hackenschmidt to go down and display his prowess before his young men.—London Tit-Bits.

HOME OF THE MILLER.

Last Trace of That Jolly Gentleman Has to Go.

One of the oldest associations in the city of Chester, England, is the famous "Mill on the Dee." It was as early as 1683 that the Earl of Chester, a powerful noble in his day, gave a charter to the neighboring Abbey of St. Werburgh, by which a mill was to be erected on the site of the Dee Bridge, the only one at that period.

This mill remained in the possession of successive abbots for some considerable time, and was a source of constant wrangling and strife between Church and civic authorities. At the dissolution of religious houses the property, of course, passed to other hands.

In later times it obtained universal fame through the song of the Jolly Miller, and the well-remembered refrain:

I care for nobody, no, not I,
If no one cares for me.

These words, indeed, may now be applied to the mill itself, for, though the original building has long since disappeared and three fires have, at different times, all but reduced it to ashes, the worst fate is now to come, and that shortly; in a word, the old mill is to be swept away altogether to make room for improvements.

Thus passes one of Chester's ancient links. However, the "How" are left, and the ancient city walls also are left, or are they? Not so, they are. And, finally, there is yet remaining "that venerable relic in pink stone," St. John's, the first cathedral of the city, dating back to the year 1076, and thus contemporaneous with the original Dee Bridge. Not far away from the site of the home of Mr. Gladstone for so many years, a fine old mansion which came into the statesman's family through Mrs. Gladstone, and in the same district Eaton Hall, the magnificent country seat of the Duke of Westminster.

Reforestation Needed.

It is officially estimated that in the United Kingdom there are about nine millions acres of land and about 100,000,000 trees under cultivation, and that one of the most serious threats to the future of the country is the want of reforestation, and that one of the most serious threats to the future of the country is the want of reforestation, and that one of the most serious threats to the future of the country is the want of reforestation.

A Royal Business Man.

The Most Rev. Randall Davidson, Archbishop of Canterbury, who is making a well-earned holiday in the South of France, has been described by one of his clergy as "the most human bishop that ever lived," a phrase that very aptly sums him up. It was his breadth of view and deep learning that first brought him prominently into the notice of the late Queen Victoria, and he remained her favorite preacher and adviser to the day of her death. Some years ago, when he was Bishop of Rochester, he was about to appoint a man to some minor office in his domestic establishment, when one of his chaplains ventured to raise a protest. "What is the matter with the man?" asked Dr. Davidson, in some surprise. "Well, he is a Dissenter," and the other, "Dear, dear! How dreadful!" cried the bishop. "And does he eat his vitals raw, or cook them first?" Needless to say, the man got the job.

The New Hats.

"Chanteur" hats are expected to be all the rage in London this spring. In recent street $125 is being demanded for one. It contains a black bird of paradise on a white straw foundation. This is called the "Simone" hat. Another, the "Guity," is in green and blue feathers, with a cock's head and red comb.

Britain's Paper Output.

Nearly 800,000 tons of paper are annually manufactured in the United Kingdom.

Australia's Stony Desert.

The great stony desert of north Australia was discovered by Captain Stuart, an Australian explorer, in 1845-6. It is north of the river Darling and is about 300 miles long, and 100 broad, consisting of sandy dunes or ridges. Its want of trees, except along the creeks, gives the country a sterile appearance. These ridges were probably formed by the joint effect of winds and a gradually retreating sea.

Hall of Fame.

The Hall of Fame for Great Americans is the name of a building on University Heights, in New York City, in which are inscribed the names of famous American men and women. Nominations for the honor are made by the public and submitted to a committee of 200 eminent citizens. In the case of men fifty-one votes are required, and in the case of women forty-seven. The first balloting took place in October, 1900.

A Parade of Force.

A remarkable march, such as has never been undertaken in India for fifty years, is now being performed by the British Government. They are marching 400 miles through a part of Bengal, where a British soldier has not been seen in the village since the days of the Mutiny. The excitement on the route is very great, and the appearance of the Highlanders has been a memorable event in the area where the sedition has had its all his own way for decades. The villages have been told that the British would never dare march into their villages, but the 2nd have done so, and fraternized with the people and given a general impression of strength and security. The march which is from Calcutta to Cawnpore, will take about 33 days to accomplish.

A Ready Writer.

Mr. Emil A. Treitzger, the young typewriting expert, has given a successful exhibition of his skill at the International Correspondence College in London. From an unseen copy he typed at the rate of 115 words a minute, and typed numerous sentences at the high speed of 200 words a minute, with no errors.

A Pugilistic Opera Singer.

Mr. John McCormick, the well-known English opera singer, is passionately fond of boxing. "It's the greatest sport in the world," he says. When Sam Hagge and Langford met at the National Sporting Club a short time ago, Mr. McCormick was singing in "Rigoletto" at Covent Garden. He was so interested in the fight that he made arrangements with the freeman to let him know how the fight was going. Mr. McCormick was singing when the freeman appeared after the first round and beckoned him to the wings. Mr. McCormick kept on singing, and backed across the stage where he could hear him without the audience knowing. "Hagge was knocked down in the first round," whispered the freeman, hoarsely. Then he sped back to the ringside again.

"It so happened," says Mr. McCormick, "that every time he reached the wings I was singing, and we went through the same performance. Hagge was knocked down five times in the second, half a dozen times in the third, and so often in the fourth and last round that everybody lost track of the number. All this was whispered to me between the acts, the knock-out coming appropriately enough during the last act, when Rigoletto drags the sack containing the body across the stage." Mr. McCormick's sympathies were with Hagge.

Pulling Him Through.

Mr. Melton Prior, the war artist, tells how during the Ashantee War, on going up the hill into the town of Kumasi with the troops under Lord (then Sir Garnet) Wolseley, he was so tired and "done up" that he could scarcely walk. He was struggling along, when Lord Wolseley, mounted on a mule, passed, and without more ado he laid hold of the mule's tail. He had been assisted thus for but a short distance when Lord Wolseley turned round and saw what he was doing. Of course, he apologized, but Wolseley only laughed, and replied, "Hold on, Mr. Prior, we will pull you in."

The Dialogue That Took Place After the Dance Ended.

A well known and popular Los Angeles physician, upon the occasion of a recent visit to a professional friend at Fresno (the physician in charge of the state institution for the deaf and dumb) was invited to attend one of the periodical "hops" given by the inmates. All the unfortunate and a goodly sprinkling of guests were present.

Before the function had progressed very far the Fresno physician approached his Los Angeles medical friend with, "Get busy, doctor! The doctor got busy. Although tipping the scales at 210, he is an easy and graceful dancer and much enjoys the exercise. Approaching a young lady of singular sweetness and beauty, he indicated his desire to dance with her. She uttered to be as striking with her feet as with her eyes, and her Los Angeles friend, in contempt of all convention, danced two or three numbers with her.

Before the close of the last one a gentleman approached his charming partner and asked for the next dance. "I should be delighted to favor you, my friend," said she in a voice no sweeter than her face, "but I've promised to dance the next number with this dummy here!"

ANCIENT LONDON.

When Danger and Lanterns Were Abandoned After Dark.

Less than 200 years ago the watchmen of London town, carrying long lanterns and halberds, walked in long files, and knee horses, dressed in black and down the cobbed streets of the world's largest city chanting the following verse:

A light there, madder! Hang out your light And see your house be clear and bright, That so your candle clear may shine, Continuing from side to side, That honest men that walk along May see to pass safe without wrong.

It is beyond our comprehension and imagination in these days of lanterns and lamps and brilliantly lighted streets to picture the streets of London in the lawless age when only a candle with a cotton wick was hung out here and there on dark nights. It was an age of lanterns, of flambeaux and linkboys, when every one made his way and prepared for death when he ventured out at night.

It is so written that it was a common practice in that city for a company of a hundred or more to make nightly invasions upon the houses of the wealthy to kill and rob, and it is recorded "that when night was come no man durst venture to walk in the streets."

A Rattlesnake Story.

In "Life and Sport on the Pacific Coast" Horace A. Vanebrel relates one of his narrow escapes from a friend's bullet. "My cousin and I had been camping and hunting for several days in a sort of paradise valley. One day during a long ride on horseback we had seen a great many rattlesnakes and killed a few, an exceptional experience. That night my cousin woke up and saw by the light of the moon a big rattler crawling across my chest. He lay for a moment fascinated, horror-struck, watching the sinuous curves of the reptile. Then he quietly reached for his six shooter, but he could not

THE UMPIRE WAS GAME.

And He Made the Kickers Play Out When Danger and Lanterns Were Abandoned After Dark.

Speaking of the doings of the veteran umpire, an old time chronicler of the record for fresh doings among the in-door players. Back in the American association days, in a game played on the old Union grounds in Allegheny, Pa., the umpire, in the ninth inning, with the score 5 to 1 in favor of the Athletics, the first man up for Pittsburgh made a home run hit to center, and the visiting team at once set up claim that it was too dark to play.

The center fielder came all the way in and pretended that he could not see the ball in the gathering darkness. "Here," said Kelly, "give me a glove," and with that he started for center field. "You see how dark it is out there," he said. "You, Kelly and Galvin, but we can't see a thing." Players and spectators sniggered, but Kelly made good his bluff. He went out to deep center and, with the smoke of the lights lying low about him, actually caught the ball on the fly and threw it back into the hands of the two pitchers without missing one.

Then the umpire came in and, taking off his gloves, said, "Play ball! If I can see 'em out there, you fellows can." The game was resumed, and the Pittsburghers won in a great battling rally by 6 to 5.

WET AND DRY MOONS.

Old Superstition and Cold Facts From the Astronomers.

There is an old superstition which dies hard, and that is that the position of the horns of the new moon tells what the weather will be. If the horns of the crescent are on the same level it will hold water, and hence it is a wet moon. If it is tipped up, so that the water will run out, and it is a wet moon.

One thing has helped keep this belief alive. The moon is "dry" in the part of the spring which is usually fair, while it is "wet" during the season of autumn rains.

If this were a sure sign of the weather we could have our predictions published many years in advance, for an astronomer can predict the exact position of the moon at any time in the future.

The cause for the different positions of the crescent is simple. The moon is south of the sun in the autumn and north of it in spring. The crescent is found by the light of the sun falling on the moon, and the sun is usually fairly in a line perpendicular to the direction of the sun from the moon. That is all there is to this old superstition.

Confucius.

Confucius regarded his own life as a failure. He spoke against ambition, yet he covered high office, nothing less than that of political adviser to some great ruler. A man of the highest lineage in China, he was yet poor and early supported himself by teaching. His pupils showed him an extraordinary devotion. The pick of the young men in his native state of Lu sat at his feet, and it was they who transmitted his tremendous influence. But Confucius saw that his immortal success, but his temporal failure. Only for a few brief years did circumstances permit him to exercise his practical genius for government. He became first a magistrate, then chief criminal judge in Lu, and to quote Professor Legge, "crime ceased." Confucius, however, became dissatisfied with the ruler whom he served, and he was weak man who neglected his duty and gave himself up more and more to dissipation, so he resigned his post and banished himself.—London Spectator.

Don't Give Up.

Among some skaters was a boy so small and so evidently a beginner that his frequent mistakes awakened the pity of a tender hearted if not wise spectator.

"Why, sonny, you're getting all bumped up," she said. "I wouldn't stay on the ice and keep falling down so I'd just come off and watch the others."

The tears of the last downfall were still rolling over the rosy cheeks, but the child looked to his adviser to the shining steel on his feet and answered, half indignantly: "I didn't get some new skates to give up with! I got 'em to learn how with!"

She-of course he bowed me awfully, but I don't think I showed it. Every time I yawned I just hid it with my hand. He tried to be gallant—really I don't see how a hand so small could—er—be—er—that is—beauty weather we're having, isn't it?"

CORPORAL SCHMIDT, V.C.

Several Trench Tommies Are on Britain's Glory Roll.

Speaking at an "Old Comrades' Dinner" the other day, and commenting on the regulations regarding the enlistment of foreigners into the British army, a distinguished cavalry colonel declared that in his own regiment there were four troopers of undoubted German nationality, and that one of them was the finest swordsman he had ever seen.

Not every soldier, and certainly not many civilians, will be aware that not only have Germans figured for generations in the British army, but many have greatly distinguished themselves on active service, and some have won the Victoria Cross.

One of these German heroes actually gained his Cross in the immortal Charge of the Light Brigade at Balaclava. He was Sergt. Charles Woodcock, 17th Lancers, afterwards promoted to be quartermaster, 104th Foot.

The gallant non-com, though a man of excellent education, could speak English only imperfectly. He even gained his regimental nickname of "Tish me" from an answer, in broken accent, he one night gave to a challenging soldier.

This incident very nearly brought about a tragedy, for, with lowered brows, the soldier, on the point of despatching the supposed "Rustian spy," when he fortunately recognized Woodcock.

Need for which he was decorated as one of unusual bravery. After the charge, Capt. Morris, of the 17th, was lying wounded in the open, when Woodcock rode back to his assistance. Though the ground was swept by the Russian Dragons, the brave fellow stuck to his post until help arrived, and a rescue was effected.

Another brave foreigner, who rode alongside Woodcock in the Light Brigade, was Quartermaster Kaunitz, of the 11th Hussars, a name sufficiently suggestive of the nationality of its owner.

Kaunitz, though he did not gain the V.C., performed prodigies of valor during the charge. Like Woodcock, he stuck to his post until help arrived, and a rescue was effected. Though the ground was swept by the Russian Dragons, the brave fellow stuck to his post until help arrived, and a rescue was effected.

When the Zulu hordes appeared before the Drift a force of colonial-raised troops promptly bolted. Among their comrades who elected to stay and share in the glory was Corporal Schmitt, a Natal colonist of Swedish birth.

Almost exactly twenty-one years later came the renowned Corps. Albrecht, who, at the great assault on Ladysmith, Jan. 6, 1900, gave up his life for England, and had his bravery and memory immortalized by the bestowal of a Cross. Albrecht was one of the many soldiers who fought hard and bravely, and was a general favorite with the Ladysmith garrison.

During the long protracted war in New Zealand, 1860-9, splendid service was rendered by a corps of Forest Rangers, led by a brave German named Von Temple, and he was survived by a soldier who had received his gallant citizen-soldier would have received high recognition.

Over and over again he took a leading part in highly dangerous operations, and on at least one occasion a regular force overtook him, and he was solely to the skill with which he extricated them from a tight corner.

New Rules On Mineral Lands

The Department of the Interior has recently issued new regulations governing the disposal of mineral rights on government land, the property of the crown.

The lands in question are situated in Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and the Northwest Territories. The purpose is to revise the regulations relative to all mineral rights, but the specific subjects being dealt with at this time relate to petroleum, natural gas and tarsand rights.

The purpose in promulgating the new regulations is to conserve to the people of Canada their interest in the natural resource that remain in the of the government while affording every opportunity and inducement for the investment of capital in their actual development.

In former times it was the policy of the government to dispose outright of mineral rights. Industrial development along such lines was in its infancy and it was regarded as proper and necessary that a broad liberality should be practised in order to encourage and foster the building up of such industries. At that time land had but small value, and as an added inducement to capital, individuals and corporation were permitted to acquire freehold rights to the surface on lands on which they undertook to develop minerals.

INCREASED VALUE

But times have changed; the great tide of immigration of the last few years has given a vastly increased value to land, and the encouragement so liberally extended to capital has had the effect of placing the development of the mineral resources of the country on a substantial footing. Hence the determination of the government to inaugurate a new policy for dealing with mineral rights, the modern policy of conservation.

Formerly, when the surface had no great value, regulations were framed whereby the applicant for mineral rights was permitted to acquire both the surface and mineral rights upon the payment of a given sum per acre. As the demand for farming lands increased, the value of the surface of mineral lands was very greatly enhanced, and under this increase in the value of surface lands it in time came about that mineral rights were being acquired for the purpose of getting the surface. Instead of the surface being acquired as an incident to the mineral rights, it became evident in many instances that ostensible mineral rights were merely being availed of to grab the surface.

To meet this condition new regulations have been framed, designed to segregate the mineral from the surface rights and introducing the principle that mineral rights may only be acquired for actual operation. Under the former regulations the right to acquire the surface with the mineral rights applied to both coal and petroleum lands with the difference that whereas title to coal lands could be acquired upon the necessary payments being made, title to petroleum lands could not be had until machinery was on the ground and a commercial flow of oil obtained. The new regulations made no provision for coal lands were framed as to give only the coal rights under lease, subject to being operated on demand. It was found, however, that the same conditions that had obtained with regard to coal lands were operating with respect to petroleum lands, and to protect the public interest the petroleum regulations are now being changed.

The principle of the new petroleum regulations is that the mineral rights are secured under lease subject to an annual rental except that for the first two years of the lease the rent may be paid in prospecting operations. But the lessee of the mineral rights does not acquire the rights to the surface, though he may be leased a sufficient area of the surface to enable him to carry on operations.

The same principle is being worked out in connection with the demand for opportunity to develop the tarsand or asphalt on the Athabasca in Northern Alberta. Under the tarsand regulations recently issued the mineral rights to these lands may be secured on payment of an annual ground rent, and the surface can only be secured on the payment of $10 an acre, and then only as much as the government considers necessary for operations.

Don't let that opportunity pass. Get after that 97 piece Dinner set for 10.00 at the Coleman Hardware company's store.

HOSPITAL MEETING

An important meeting in regard to building of a new hospital was on Thursday evening. Among those were the Nillage Council and the following committee E. Holmes, W. Hayson W. Graham, H. James, W. L. Onimette, T. W. Davies and J. M. Keegan.

It was decided to send to the Sisters of Providence at Midnapore an account of the population of town and district, the number of beds required. The committee also decided to ask the Sisters what they would expect the town to do and what rates would be charged. As soon as an answer is received a mass meeting of the citizens will be held and the great advantage of a hospital placed before the people.

Canada Gave Little To United States

Ottawa, March 25. — The news of a tariff agreement was received by government circles in Ottawa with satisfaction not at all lessened by the fact that such an outcome has been confidently looked for ever since the conference Albany between President Taft and Hon. W. S. Fielding.

While the Canadian government did not shrink from a tariff war should it become necessary there has always been a feeling that tariff strife should be avoided if it was possible. It is understood that the despatches received from Washington credit Hon. Mr. Fielding with having made rather good terms.

EDSON is the first Grand Trunk Divisional point west of Edmonton.

EDSON is the only Grand Trunk Pacific Divisional Point between Edmonton and the Rocky Mountains.

EDSON is 126 miles from Edson, is surrounded by a beautiful country conceded to be one of the best farming districts in the west. Some thirty miles south are very extensive coal fields and a railroad will be constructed to these just as soon as steel is laid to Edson next spring. The line to the rich Peace River district will be started north from Edson. Edson is a short distance from the mountains and is situated in a similar position to Calgary. The Canadian National Park and a large sanitarium will be built at the mountain entrance.

Every transcontinental railway has a large city at its entrance to the mountains, such as Denver in the United States and Calgary in Canada. Lots in Edson will be worth thousands in the course of a few years for this reason alone. The last divisional point before the railroad strikes the Rockies.

EDSON is the natural entrance to the famous Peace River country as well as to the rich coal fields to the south.

EDSON CENTRE adjoins the Grand Trunk Pacific property to the west and just in line with the growth of the town.

What will these lots be worth when the Grand Trunk Pacific complete their round houses, machine shops, and Edson becomes the busiest industrial centre of the west?
